Wabash County is located in the southeastern part of Illinois, with a population of 11,947 (2010 U.S. Census). Wabash County is home to persons identifying themselves as White (96.9%), Black (0.6%), or Hispanic/Latino (1.3%). According to the U.S. Census, 12.7% of residents live at or below the federal poverty level (FPL), compared to the state rate of 13.3%.

Wabash County was named for the Wabash River, which forms its eastern and southern borders. The Miami Indian word for the river is pronounced “wabashike” (pronounced wah-bah-she-key). It actually means “pure white” and refers to the white limestone on the river bottom.

Children under the age of 5 years constitute approximately 6% of the population of Wabash County. Early care and education in the county are provided by Head Start, Preschool for All (PFA), and child care settings (including licensed child care centers, licensed family child care homes, and license-exempt child care centers or homes).

The Illinois Early Intervention Program (funded by IDHS) provides services in the home to children with disabilities, birth to age 3. Preschoolers with special needs (ages 3-5) may be served in PFA sites, Head Start programs, child care settings, early childhood special education classrooms, or the home.
According to population estimates reported on IECAM (2008 census estimates), 53% of 3- and 4-year-old children in Wabash County are living in families at or below 185% FPL (first PFA priority level).

The map (top right) shows the distribution of publicly funded preschool sites in Wabash County (divided into townships). The color ramp (in the legend) indicates the percentage of 3- and 4-year-old children who live in households with an income at or below 185% FPL. Note that those townships in the darker shades of brown reveal a higher percentage of poverty. The map highlights the importance of locating PFA and Head Start sites in areas of highest need.

Although child care centers serve children who live above 185% FPL, many children from low-income families are cared for in child care settings all over the county.
